Nokia and Google announce search partnership

N96, N78, 6210 and 6220 to get Googling

Nokia and Google today announced that Google's search engine will be integrated with the Nokia Search application.

The team-up will begin with the Nokia N96, Nokia N78, Nokia 6210 Navigator and Nokia 6220 classic.

Google search will be extended to additional Nokia handset models in the future.

Ultimately, Nokia says it will make Google search available to its customers in over 100 countries around the world, serving mobile owners speaking more than 40 languages.

Google search has previously been available on Nokia internet tablets, and last year the Nokia N95 8GB became the first mobile device to fully support YouTube, which is owned by Google.
