by Stuart Miles published on 21 February 2008

Toshiba has confirmed that it isn't ruling out going Blu on its laptop range in the future.

Although the company has confirmed that it won't be offering a standalone Blu-ray player anytime soon, Olivier VanWynendaele - deputy general manager, HD DVD has said at the company's annual UK event that Toshiba is "still reviewing the strategy for our laptop range when it comes to the next generation format".

The announcement means that Tosh laptop owners might be able to watch high-def movies on the go in the future.

We will keep you posted.
