Moonlight lamp offers light at night

Replicates the night sun

by Stuart Miles published on 28 February 2008

If you're having trouble getting your little one off to sleep at night because they are afraid of the dark, baby shop JojoMamanBebe believes it might just have the answer.

The company has launched the Moonlight lamp, a nightlight that replicates real moonlight, which promises to emit a blue/green light and provides plenty of visibility without being intrusive.

Better still, JojoMamanBebe says that it is efficient to run too only costing 50p in electricity for a year.

Yours for £10.
