

<http://www.pocket-lint.com/news/13945/firefox-logo-spotted-in-space>

Firefox logo spotted in space

Snapped by the Hubble Space Telescope

by Stuart Miles published on 12 April 2008

It seems even the stars support the Firefox browser as shown by this image captured by the Hubble Space Telescope 4 years ago.

The image, snapped in March 2004 is of the variable star V838 Monocerotis, which lies near the edge of our Milky Way Galaxy.

Of course, given enough time, we're sure staring long enough into the picture you'll find a schooner, Jesus, and most likely the logos of 10 other companies including Microsoft's Internet Explorer.

If you're fans of Firefox, did you know you can search Pocket-lint directly from Firefox's search bar?

Our Firefox Pocket-lint Search Tool gives you quick access to search for all the latest gadget and technology news and reviews even if you aren't on the site.

