Wii Fit fanatics cause £20.1 million worth of damage

Over excited gamers causing calamities

by Katie Scott published on 16 June 2008

Wii fanatics are apparently breaking more than a sweat with their vigorous exercise moves. A British insurer has done a survey of its female customers and found that women using the Wii Fit have caused £20 million of destruction to their homes. Nearly a fifth of the women who responded to a poll by insurance company Sheila's Wheels admitted to sending vases, TVs and even their furry friend flying. Those polled admitted that they had caused an average of £6.55 worth of damage to their homes in the last year by throwing over enthusiastic moves. That figure equates to a national bill of £20.1 million. The most common calamities included bumping into furniture and pulling a muscle.
