Jabra BT4010 headset with LCD display

Check battery level, connection status and call status

by Katie Scott published on 26 June 2008

Jabra has launched a new headset, the BT4010.

The key feature is a handy LCD display running along it for those of us who can't be bothered to decipher flashing lights and beeps to work out whether or not we're paired or if we have any battery left.

The Jabra BT4010 is 49 x 17 x 28 mm and weighs in at 10g.

It boasts up to six hours of talk time, 150 hours on stand-by, auto-pairing and "crystal clear sound" thanks to e-SCO technology.

It can be worn with or without an earhook and comes with a selection of two hooks for added comfort.

It is charged using a Micro USB charger connection.

The Jabra BT4010 is available now for around £29.99.
