But no news on European launch date

by Katie Scott published on 2 July 2008

Acer has launched two new projectors for home cinema fans, but it looks like they're only set for the Japanese market for the moment.

The new models are the P3250 and the P5280.

The P3250 provides an image in 1024 x 768 resolution, a brightness of 2000 lumens or 1600 lumens in Eco mode, and a contrast ratio of 2000:1.

It also features RGB/HDMI connectors, and built-in 2 watt speakers for an expected price of around 600 euros.

The higher end P5280 provides a brightness of 3500 Lumens or 2800 Lumens in power-save mode, again a contrast ratio of 2000:1, and a resolution of 1024 x 768.

It also offers HDMI, DVI, Analogue, RGB, S-Video, and composite connections for 660 euros.

The last European launch was the H5350, which was announced way back in April and is now on shelves for around £589.
