Rainbow-hued iPod nanos incoming?

Rumours see colourful refresh

by Amy-Mae Elliott published on 23 July 2008

Rumours are hitting the news wires that some details of Apple's new iPod nano range have been leaked from Asian manufacturing sources.

9to5Mac, the site that leaked news of the latest nano versions this time last year, reports that the new models will get memory capacity upgrades as well as "new features".

The storage is said to double for the new versions, which would mean 8GB and 16GB models, compared to the current 4GB and 8GB offerings.

In addition, it's being reported that the updated gadget "will appear in multiple colors ... not multiple color versions but each one will have a plethora of colors".

9to5Mac promises more information to be revealed soon - we will keep you updated as we hear more.
