Apple now worth more than Google

But Microsoft's still the daddy

by Katie Scott published on 15 August 2008

We have it from Digital Daily and Mac Rumours that Apple is now worth more money than Google.

According to the online reports, Apple's "market capitalisation at $159.37 billion is now worth more than Google's which is at $157.56 billion".

Apple's fit went beyond the $100 billion mark in May 2007, and it seems, economic slowdown or no, it made a fair enough of cash since then.

And just so you can see how Apple compares with other tech giants, the lovely team over at MacDailyNews has compiled a list of the market values of other notable companies:

- Microsoft - $255,648,204,000
- IBM - $169,964,678,000
- Apple - $157,012,662,240
- Google - $156,392,862,560
- Cisco - $142,125,692,160
- Intel - $135,658,860,000
- Hewlett-Packard - $111,866,423,760
- Nokia - $97,746,699,520
- Research In Motion - $71,143,935,000
- Disney - $59,257,501,500
- Dell - $50,483,256,060
