MySpace and HP team-up

With branded print buttons

by Amy-Mae Elliott published on 9 October 2008

MySpace and HP have announced plans to integrate HP printing technology across MySpace, including all photo sections.

This will mean MySpace users can print the photo sections, personal profiles, blog entries, comments and messages stored on their MySpace profiles and "share them offline in new and exciting ways".

The first stage of the companies' collaboration will be an HP-branded print button that enables MySpace users to preview and print photos directly from their MySpace profiles.

In the future, the companies expect to provide the ability to create and print personalised merchandise with photos from MySpace.

The MySpace and HP product team-up will launch to the MySpace community in the United States, Australia, Western Europe and Canada in November.
