

<http://www.pocket-lint.com/news/18660/taggit-wi-fi-gps-tool-symbian>

Taggit location tool launches for mobiles

Tag friends and places

by Katie Scott published on 23 October 2008

A new tool that allows phone users to tag places and people "in real time" has launched for Symbian mobile phones.

"After years of repeatedly asking friends for pub and restaurant recommendations, sharing opinions about our own favourite places, and trying to easily locate nearby friends, we were inspired to develop Taggit", explains Loughlin Spollen, co-founder of Taggit.

"By creating a space where people can geotag places and read reviews, find friends, discover people with similar interests, Taggit brings online social networks into the real world."

Taggit settings allow the tagger to share these locations/images with other users or to just keep the tag as a personal reference.

The service is free and is available today.

The company which provided the location tech for Taggit is Skyhook Wireless, whose first tool was the XPS system, which is said to "provide an instant location and is more accurate than current technologies in congested downtown areas".

