Earth Trek launches "Travelling Webcam Hub"

Portable model that doesn't need to attach to your PC

by Katie Scott published on 28 November 2008

Earth Trek, the company which launched what was the world's smallest projector way back in May, has now come out with a new webcam.

It is claiming its new Travelling Webcam Hub is unique because it, errrrrr, doesn't scratch your LCD screen because it doesn't have to be attached to it.

It's designed for portability hence the integrated metal sliding cover to protect the camera.

Features-wise, you get auto focus, auto brightness, snap button, and a two port USB Hub.

It provides a VGA quality image (640 x 480) video, and has a 1.3 megapixel sensor.

The price is expected to be between $45-$49.
