Bowers and Wilkins to launch "Baby" Zeppelin iPod speaker

New models inbound

by Stuart Miles published on 26 March 2009

Bowers and Wilkins will launch new versions of its award winning Zeppelin iPod speaker later in the year Pocket-lint has learnt.

Promising new "new media" models, a spokesman for the company said that the hi-fi specialist was working on a "baby" version of the speaker that Pocket-lint voted Best Audio gadget for 2008.

The good news for music fans is that a smaller version of the speaker is likely to mean a smaller price, something that many say has put them off in the past from signing up to the B&W audio experience.

Unfortunately there is no word on when or how much at the moment.

We will keep you posted.
