

<http://www.pocket-lint.com/news/23854/philips-launches-streamium-np2900-streamer>

Philips launches Streamium NP2900

New music streamer

by Amy-Mae Elliott published on 1 May 2009

Philips has launched a new product into its Streamium music range, the NP2900, described as a "compact yet advanced wireless streaming music player".

With its four in-built speakers, four amplifiers and Digital Signal Processor, the NP2900 streams music wirelessly from your PC's music collection or from internet radio stations.

With a full colour screen, remote control and an intuitive user interface, including alphanumerical search, Philips says the system is easy to use.

The NP2900 also gets Philips' "FullSound" tech for enhancing digital music as well as its "LivingSound" tech that claims to create the optimum listening experience by ensuring that your music is widely and evenly distributed throughout the room.

The NP2900 will be launched in May for around £249.

