Gear4 launches CDM-D150 microsystem

Adds DAB to the CDM-D100

by Duncan Geere published on 1 July 2009

Gear4 has announced an upgrade for its CDM-D100 microsystem (pictured), which was released earlier this year. The CDM-D150 has exactly the same specs as its little brother, but also contains a DAB radio.

For the forgetful amongst you, the CDM-D100 had a top-loading CD player, universal iPod dock, built in FM (to which DAB has been added) and a line-in port for plugging in your MP3 player.

There's also an alarm clock, and 5 preset EQ settings, for bass fiends. There's a remote control provided, too. It'll be available in August, and will cost £120.
