Disney announces 3D "G-Force" game

See the gadget-loving guinea pigs in 3D

We've brought you news already of Disney's 3D Toy Story Mania! game for the Wii and it seems it's not the only 3D gaming experience incoming from Disney Interactive Studios.

G-Force, based on the film of the same name and featuring "a unique team of specially trained guinea pigs that use high-tech gadgets and specialised talents to complete a dangerous secret mission", will also offer "three-dimensional stereoscopic technology".

By wearing the special "anaglyphic" glasses bundled with the games, players will see the action extend and "come out" of their screens.

The glasses will mean both players can experience 3D during a two-player Toy Story Mania! game or for an accompanying family member to view that perspective in G-Force.

The 3D expert that worked on G-Force says: "Like the 3D effects in some feature films, the goal for adding 3-D in G-Force enabled the two miniature creatures - guinea pig Darwin and housefly Mooch - to appear to come forward from the screen, which creates a unique experience for the player".

G-Force will be available in 3D on the Xbox 360 and PS3 on 31 July while Toy Story Mania! is still scheduled for autumn.
