

<http://www.pocket-lint.com/news/25390/why-cry-baby-analyser-thinkgeek>

"Why Cry" baby analyser launches

Scream translator

by Amy-Mae Elliott published on 8 July 2009

Presumably working along the same lines as the Bowlingual dog bark translating device, ThinkGeek is currently offering the "Why Cry" baby analyser.

Described as the baby monitor of new parent's (sleep deprived, scream shattered) dreams, its "advanced frequency analysis technology" will tell parents what's wrong with their offspring within 20 seconds.

Well, when we say what's wrong we mean within the limited categories of stressed, sleepy, annoyed, bored or hungry.

Battery-powered, the device, that also measures the temperature and humidity in the room, is on sale now for $100.

