You'll get square eyesÖ

A Japanese company has launched a new product aimed primarily at commuters - a teeny weeny TV screen that fits onto your spectacles.

Weighing 35 grams and measuring only 2cm, the screen suckers to the front of one of your glasses' lenses and a separate battery pack (presumably tucked into your pocket or bag) provides the juice.

According to Zee News, the general manager of the company who makes the product, Scalar, said at the launch; "By using this gadget, you can enjoy watching videos with one eye while looking at people and the surroundings".
