

<http://www.pocket-lint.com/news/8370/lg-j10hd-chocolate-home-cinema>

LG launches J10HD, a chocolate-flavoured home cinema system

Do you want chocolate with your popcorn?

by Amy-Mae Elliott published on 25 June 2007

LG Electronics has introduced the J10HD, a home cinema system with a hard disk drive, DVD player and a 2.1 sound system that adopts the same style as LG's designer phone, the Chocolate.

Sharing the Chocolate's ultra glossy black finish and boasting ice white touch-sensitive buttons, the J10HD is being pitched at the style conscious consumer who wants a multifunctional home entertainment device in a slick package.

Chocolate-lovers can rip CDs to the J10HD's 80GB HDD, as well as play music via a USB or MP3 player and record radio programmes.

Movie-wise the DVD player supports DVD-R/RW, DVD+R/RW, DivX, WMA, VCD/SVCD and MPEG4 formats and there's one HDMI port.

Thanks to the J10HD's "Virtual Sound Matrix", LG claims the standard 2.1 system will sound like a 5.1 system. The two speakers offer 75 watts per channel and there is a 150 watt subwoofer, meaning a total power of 300 watts.

There are certainly more competent systems out there, but it's the gorgeous looks and wicked-cool touch controls that will sell this baby, and sell it will.

The J10HD will be available from July 2007, pricing to be confirmed.

