Nokia unveiled the 7500 Prism mobile phone at a fashion event in China yesterday.

The 7500 is one of a long line of Nokia's crazy fashion-type phones, although it is more functional than some.

It's very similar to, if not the same, as the 7900 we unofficially previewed a little while ago (link to story below).

It boasts a 2-megapixel camera with flash, a microSD card slot and a 2-inch QVGA display.

It will be available in China later this year, with no word on a release in any other territories yet.
