Trust offer Bluetooth handsfree kit for the car

by Stuart Miles published on 26 January 2005

Trust, who seem to be launching a product a week at the moment has launched another. This time it's a strange looking Bluetooth car kit.

The LCD HS-8200 comes with an illuminated display, phone number memory and promises to allow you to make calls "safer, easier and more comfortable."

The kit is powered by a 12 volt cigarette lighter charger and can be paired with eight different devices at any one time.

If the mobile telephone supports the function, it is also possible to easily synchronize the memory with the car kit, so that 20 telephone numbers can be stored in the car kit's memory.

The kit will be available at the end of the month and will cost £79.99
