Sharp shows off world's thinnest LCD television

You can't beat a good world's "est"...

by Amy-Mae Elliott published on 18 July 2007

Sharp has revealed its Aquos G Series LCD televisions in Japan with the 16 models ranging from 26- to 52-inchers.

The series includes a model just 81 millimetres thick (the thinnest of the current R Series is a yesterday's-news 85mm).

This new range is also lighter, so will be ideal for wall hanging.

The full details are to be revealed at September's IFA show, which Pocket-lint.co.uk will be attending, so we'll bring you more then...
